BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE:

Dayton high school was located at 290 Mill St., Dayton, VA from 1914-1956. That building now houses The Dayton Learning Center.

Charles M. Robinson of Richmond was the architect of this building. He is responsible for a number of schools in Harrisonburg and Rockingham County, including the initial plans for what is now James Madison University. This Colonial Revival structure used the Corinthian order with a very fine cornice. It was one of the earliest of the brick consolidated schools in Rockingham County. The exterior has been restored.
